DAUGHERTY DECLINES TO TALK FURTHER ON REFUSAL TO RESIGN

Tells Newspaper Men in Chicago Statement May Be Issued Later.

STILL DEMANDS HEARING

Will Not Even Consider Voluntarily Quitting Cabinet, Attorney General Declared, Until Senate Committee Has Investigated Administration.

By United Press.

CHICAGO, Feb. 28. - Attorney Harry M. Daugherty arrived here from Washington at 9 A. M today and at once drove to the Union League Club.

Smiling pleasantly, Daugherty shook his head at the group of newspaper men at the station and declared he had nothing to say.

Daugherty said a statement might be issued from the federal district attorney's office where he will confer with several aides.

"I will issue a statement indicating my position in this case as soon as I've read some telegrams I'm expecting from Washington," Daugherty said. After a hasty conference at the district attorney's office Daugherty will take the train for Miami.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28.—Attorney General Daugherty has determined not to resign without a hearing, a statement he issued last night said. His stand was reaffirmed in the face of growing pressure for his removal. Further, he refused to promise that he would resign upon termination of the proposed inquiry in the Senate into his administration.

Daugherty's conclusion followed an almost continuous succession of conferences in the midst of which the attorney general suddenly left Washington. It was announced after his departure that he had been called to Florida, whose Mrs. Daugherty is ill and would go by way of Chicago to attend to public business there. His determination to remain Attorney General, pending the Senate inquiry, was announced to the country in this terse statement prepared before his departure and issued from the department of justice.

"It is not my purpose to even consider tendering my resignation as attorney general until after a fair hearing on charges preferred against me."

The White House refrained from any public statement but it was evident that until Mr. Daugherty had announced definitely his refusal to retire under fire, the belief in some Administration quarters had been that his resignation was imminent.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28.—"I intend to push the hearing," Senator Wheeler, Democrat, Montana, said when informed that Attorney General Daugherty had announced that he was not even contemplating tendering his resignation until after a fair hearing on the charges against him.

"I will try to get my resolution through today," Senator Wheeler added referring to his resolution proposing a full investigation of Mr. Daugherty's administration.

Not a Quitter, Daugherty Tells United Press

By United Press.

CHICAGO, Feb. 28.—"I'm no quitter," Attorney General Harry M. Daugherty told the United Press as he arrived here today for a conference with federal officials conducting the grand jury investigation of the United States Veterans Bureau.

Daugherty was greatly heartened by telegrams of confidence he said he had received from all parts of the country.

"A winner never quits; a quitter never wins," one telegram stated, and Daugherty showed it with pride.

"That's my position," he said. "I'm no quitter."

Daugherty will leave Chicago shortly for Miami, Fla., to visit his invalid wife.

Daugherty jokingly remarked he assumed the Senate was still in session and that "none of the senators had resigned." He said he planned to leave for Florida at 9:10 o'clock this evening.

Change Taking Place In Motorists' Ideas Of Value of Clubs

In view of the fact that the Youghiogheny Automobile Club has just launched a campaign to increase the membership from 100 to 500 the following communication from the Pennsylvania Motor Federation will prove of interest, not only to members of the club but to all motorists, who are prospective members and who will be asked to join and further the cause in this section of the State:

"A rapidly developing and radical change is taking place among motorists in their attitude of mind toward automobile or motor clubs, says J. Clyde Myton, secretary of the Pennsylvania Motor Federation in a report made public today.

"The old idea that a motor club was merely an organization for the purpose of holding 'club runs' and other social functions has been entirely displaced by the modern conception of an organization of motorists for the purposes of self-protection and service. In fact there is a growing feeling that these organizations should not be called 'clubs' and that the name is a misnomer.

"The result of this development has been to greatly stimulate the growth of existing clubs or associations of motorists and to start the organization idea in many communities throughout the State. There are at the present time not less than ten new clubs in process of organization and several defunct clubs are being revived.

"All this activity among motorists is due, according to officials of the Pennsylvania Motor Federation, which comprises 62 of the 80 clubs in the State, to the arousing of motorists to a realization that they constitute the most heavily taxed class of citizens in the Commonwealth and that the only way for them to remedy conditions lies in organization. Hence they are forming clubs and entering the federation and through it the great national organization, the American Automobile Association, popularly known as the Three A's."

The Catholic Daughters of America held a very enjoyable social meeting last night in Maddas Hall. A delightful two act play was capably presented after which the remainder of the evening was spent at dancing. It was an open meeting and the large hall was filled with members and friends of the society.

The first act of the play, "A Country School," was well received, the sayings and jokes by the teacher, Miss Emma Mentzer, and scholars being very entertaining. Mrs. John Hart, as "Lizzie Perkins" was the hit of the act, her songs and acting being especially clever. The next number "Crinoline Days," by Mrs. A. V. Corrado and chorus, was very well rendered. All the ladies appeared in costumes of 1871. A comic sketch of the trials of a music professor, with Joseph Cuneo appearing in the role of the professor, came in for a great share of the applause. Song, "Mammy's Little Coal Black Rose," with Mrs. M. Woldinger seated on the stage as Mammy and Little Miss Fatheringham as the picaninny, was well rendered by a chorus. Music was rendered by the Knights of Columbus Orchestra.

Ruddy Cheeks—Sparkling Eyes—Most Women Can Have

Says Dr. Edwards, a Well-Known Ohio Physician

Dr. F. M. Edwards for 17 years treated scores of women for liver and bowel ailments. During these years he gave to his patients a prescription made of a few well-known vegetable ingredients mixed with olive oil, naming them Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets. You will know them by their olive color.

These tablets are wonder-workers on the liver and bowels, which cause a normal action, carrying off the waste and poisonous matter in one's system.

If you have a pale face, sallow look, dull eyes, pimples, coated tongue, headaches, a listless, no-good feeling, all out of sorts, inactive bowels, you take one of Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets nightly for a time and note the pleasing results.

Thousands of women and men take Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets—the successful substitute for calomel—now and then just to keep them fit. 15c and 30c.

State Opens Drive Against Reckless Taxicab Drivers

By United Press

HARRISBURG Feb. 28.—A campaign throughout the State to put out of business the reckless taxicab driver and the nomad jitney operating without the necessary certificate was begun today by the Public Service Commission

In Philadelphia state officials and local authorities have already made plans to end law violations of this kind The commission has granted authority to the Philadelphia police to act against offending taxi operators

Under arrangements worked out in Philadelphia, which will be followed in other places the city will supply police facilities the commission lacks

"After we have cleaned up the taxicab situation in Philadelphia," W. D B Ainey chairman of the Public Service Commission, told the United Press, "we will go to Pittsburg, Scranton, Wilkes-Barre, Erie and other larger cities of the State where we plan similar action. We hope to obtain the same fine cooperation in those cities the mayor and city solicitor of Philadelphia have extended us"

Two recent experiences of Ainey in Philadelphia have served to speed up the campaign against taxicabs Several days ago, the commission chairman was leaving a hotel there when he noticed a disreputable looking taxi standing at the curb.

"It was the worst looking taxicab or jitney I have ever seen," Ainey said

He noted the license number and when he returned to Harrisburg he had the cab investigated. He learned it had no certificate of public convenience and its passengers were without insurance protection the law provides.

On another occasion Ainey was riding in a touring car A taxi traveling rapidly drove straight for the automobile in which he was riding At the last moment, when but a few feet away and it seemed impossible to prevent a collision, the taxi driver suddenly swerved his machine, missing the other car by inches.

The last experience was "the straw that broke the camel's back" and Ainey returned to Harrisburg determined to end reckless and unlawful jitney operating.

A REAL SERVICE IN GAME PROTECTION.

The Fayette County Fish & Game Protective Association is doing more than merely drawing a few lovers of outdoor sport in a single community together for the promotion of a spirit of good fellowship among persons of kindred tastes. It has already accomplished much in the direction of arousing a more general interest in the protection of fish and game and the elimination of many of the abuses which tend to bring discredit upon fishing and hunting as these pastimes are followed by those to whom the true sporting instinct is unknown.

From various sections of the county applications have been received from rod and gun enthusiasts for permission to form local associations. This indicates a very widespread interest in the subjects of the association and shows that there is no lack of persons who are both anxious and willing to perform some real service in behalf of fish and game protection.

Weather conditions have prevented the formation of these locals but plans have been made for taking up this work very shortly and in ample time for the several communities engaged in stocking streams with fish and other activities incident to the opening of spring.

President Krepps and other officers and members of the county association are to be commended for the zeal they are displaying in making the organization a real force in the accomplishment of its objects and purposes. The effectiveness of their work will be made proportionate to the increase in the number of local associations and the team work among the membership. This ought to include every person in the county who enjoys the thrill that comes from having opportunities to display the true spirit of sportsmanship when in pursuit of fish and game.

Tax Chickens Come Home to Roost

Johnstown Democrat.

Chickens come home to roost. A vicious idea is like a thistle. It must be uprooted to be destroyed. Some time ago the state of Pennsylvania imposed a tax on anthracite coal. This tax, it was presumed, would be paid by the consumer. And the consumer was in the main to be found outside Pennsylvania.

The idea was a vicious one. But that does not prevent Minnesota from taking it up. For a great many years the people of Minnesota have been fighting to secure legislation taxing ore lands. A law is now in force levying a six per cent tax on the net profits of all companies engaged in mining and shipping ore. Another enactment imposes a six per cent tax on ore royalties. The Minnesota farmers are now demanding that both the royalty tax and the net profit tax be increased to 10 per cent.

The injustice of that proposal lies in the fact that Minnesota, by taxing a natural resource, is levying on the public at large for the support of her own institutions. That principle is wrong. The people of Pennsylvania should not be compelled to contribute to the support of the Minnesota state government. But if Pennsylvania is right in taxing coal, Minnesota is right in taxing ore.

THE STORY OF DOHENY
A Romance of "Black Gold"

By HAROLD E. SWISHER
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
(Copyright, 1924, by United Press.)

Part I.

Near the close of the nineteenth century a miner came out of the Arizona desert and crossed the Mojave desert to Los Angeles. He was a brown-skinned, middle aged man, roughly dressed and with the squint in his eyes which comes from long years spent under the pitiless sun, reflected from bright, gleaming sand wastes.

There was little about this miner's appearance to set him apart from any of the hundreds of other men of the desert who poured into Los Angeles throughout the year for relaxation or a new "grub-stake." He had spent most of his small savings for a smoking car ticket, and reached Southern California practically "broke."

Another failure in the hard battle for existence he might easily have been branded—and quite fittingly so, except for the fact that he alone refused to believe it.

Less than a quarter of a century later, this miner, Edward Laurence Doheny, turning his labor into the development of California and Mexican oil fields, had become one of the richest men in the country, a strong figure behind the scenes in national politics, and one of the central characters in the great naval reserve oil scandal which "broke" in 1924.

Prospector, gold miner, surveyor, lawyer and laborer he was—all without success, only to become one of the leading men of wealth in the United States when he turned to "black gold" in a last hope of making a fortune.

Edward L. Doheny was born at Fond du Lac, Wis., August 10, 1855. His father was Patrick Doheny, a poor Irishman, while his mother before her marriage, was Elizabeth Quigley.

There was little about Doheny's boyhood to set him apart from other lads of his age. He attended school and advanced rapidly, being particularly bright in the different mathematical and scientific subjects. He finished high school at the age of 15, but did not go on to college.

Spirit of Adventure.

There was a spirit of adventure within the youth which rebelled at the idea of spending his life in Fond du Lac, or any other one place. This unrest influenced him to leave home in July, 1872, at the age of 16. Young Doheny went to Kansas, where he joined a government surveying crew, busy in mapping the thousands of acres of middle west land then uncharted.

The following year he accompanied a new government surveying party to Indian territory, which later became Oklahoma, where he helped subdivide the Comanche and Kiowa reservations.

This outdoor life kept Doheny satisfied for three years. He was living in the open, liked the work, and spent all his extra hours studying books on geology and science, until he became familiar with many rock formations, and laid the foundation for a specialized knowledge of mineralogy and geology.

Then came news of the discovery of gold in the Black Hills, and Doheny rushed to that field, inspired by the lure of the yellow metal. But he was doomed to disappointment, as the Black Hills was still Indian territory and not open to prospecting.

News of a silver strike in Colorado carried the youth to Colorado, where silver had been located, but oncoming winter made prospecting impossible, and Doheny's restless spirit would not let him wait for spring.

Gathering three other, disgruntled prospectors, Doheny set out afoot for New Mexico, with burros to carry their camping equipment.

There, and in Arizona, he spent the next 14 years—years of long, hard days of toil, and with success meager to the point of failure.

Doheny worked in almost every mining camp in the southwest. He discovered three new veins of ore during the long years, but his restless spirit would not let him tarry long enough to capitalize his findings.

Bradshaw, Cave Creek, Tombstone, Tono Basin and Globe—all famous names in the mining days of yore—know his presence.

Fifty Dollars a Year.

It was a hard life, one which forced the greatest frugality. He lived on little, for little was all he had. More than one year his expenditures for foodstuffs amounted to less than $50.

Hardships and dangers beset the young miner as well. On one occasion he had his hand badly chewed by a mountain lion, which he finally killed. On another he fell down a mine shaft and broke both his legs.

Neither during his mining days nor during those of prosperity later, was he known to drink or smoke.

He married, taking for his wife Carrie Estelle Betzold, of Marshalltown, Ia.

Finally, disappointed at long years of toil which brought no reward, Doheny gathered together his few possessions, and, with his wife, went to Los Angeles. Some time after his arrival, he formed a partnership with Charles A. Canfield and Joseph A. Chanslor, and the three pooled their slender resources, and went out into the Mojave desert, in San Bernardino county, seeking gold.

They found it, in small quantities, and started a mine, but the metal faded, and they returned to Los Angeles "flat broke" to start life anew. Doheny was then 40.

While working at odd jobs, Doheny happened to pick up a book on the oil exudes of California, written by W. A. Goodyear, assistant state geologist of California in 1887, after Goodyear had made a careful investigation of oil prospects in the state.

Doheny studied the volume religiously, read it through time and again, and absorbed all the knowledge of oil possibilities in California which Goodyear had compiled, which, being a writer and student instead of a gambler, he had failed to capitalize.

(Part II Tomorrow.)

"Law Factories"

Philadelphia Ledger

The average American will feelingly indorse Secretary Hughes' address before the American Law Institute. We have, as he asserts, too many laws and too many unenforced laws. As he states:

> We have in this country the greatest law factory the world has ever seen. Forty-eight states and the Federal Government are turning out each year thousands of new laws, while at the same time the courts in the performance of their judicial duty are giving us thousands of new precedents.

If laws would make us so, we ought to be the very best and most law-abiding people in the world. More than 12,000 statutes a year are poured out. This Gargantuan legal grist requires the making of 175,000 pages of decisions yearly. On the highest courts it throws the burden of making 13,000 permanently rendered decisions every 12 months.

Nor do we grow greatly better because of it. The secretary expressed some of the resentment in the mind of the plain citizen when he protested against these legislative mills that grind neither slowly nor exceedingly small. Most of us realize we are being smothered in an avalanche of laws and ground up in our own legal and legislative mills.

There always has been a law-making mania in this country, and it has grown with the years. This has resulted in a careless acceptance by all kinds and conditions of men of a feeling that some laws are made to be kept and others broken. It results in men habitually and well-nigh unconsciously breaking many laws and yet continuing to regard themselves as good citizens.

It is, as Secretary Hughes points out, an indictment of our ability to govern ourselves. We have proceeded on the theory that law is the sovereign panacea. We are in the slow process of discovering that a law unenforced is a dangerous thing and that we can have so many that they defeat their own purposes.

Wage Reductions in Several Coal Fields

According to reports from southern West Virginia, the New River Company has restored the November, 1917, wage scale at its 15 operations. The miners, it is said, have not only accepted the reduction but had asked the management to put it into effect, so that they might have steadier work.

Wage reductions have also been made at some of the mines in the Georges Creek region of Maryland. Under the new scale pick miners are paid 90 cents a ton, while other rates are as follows: Loading, 70 cents a ton; cutting and scraping (gross ton) 12 cents; motormen, blacksmiths, carpenters and electricians, $4.80 per eight-hour day; brakemen and drivers, $4.64 a day; skilled roadmen $4.80; roadmen's helpers and inside labor, $4.48; skilled wiremen, $4.80; plane runners, $4.64; trappers, $2.40; skilled dumpers car shifters and slate pickers $4.00; all other labor about tipple $3.52; outside labor, $3.52.

Rates for yardage and deadwork have been reduced 35 per cent. In the Bakerstown seam the rate for pick mining is 95 cents a ton; loading 75 cents, and cutting and scraping 15 cents.

Wage cuts were put into effect some little time ago by many of the operators in Somerset county and the Upper Potomac region of northern West Virginia. There have also been scale adjustments in various parts of eastern Kentucky.

THE WEATHER.

The weather is a thing which we Could never do without,
It's something all society
Can safely talk about.

It has no friend to answer back
Or even wear a scowl,
No one your judgment will attack
If you should call it foul.

If of the weather you should tell
The very worst you knew,
And prove your dreadful tale as well,
No further would you go

No eager gossip hearing you,
Would hasten to repeat
The scandal you had started to
The neighbors down the street.

No little woman's face would pale,
No wounded man reply
That you had crushed him with your tale
Or stabbed him with a lie.

So when to gossip you're inclined,
When something you'd abuse,
The weather not your fellow kind,
Is always safe to use.

Troubles Ended

Schwartz says Tanlac not only ended his seven years' suffering, but built him up so that he feels years younger.

"Tanlac ended my seven years of stomach trouble and built me up so I feel years younger" declares Isadore Schwartz, veteran salesman 1611 North Sixth St Philadelphia, Pa

Indigestion caused a feeling like a rock right in the pit of my stomach and nervous cramping spells, loss of sleep and lack of energy kept me tired out and run down in general

"Four bottles of Tanlac straightened out my stomach so I can now eat without it hurting me a particle And the way my energy has picked up is surprising For the first time in years my work is a pleasure Yes sir, I owe my present fine health to the help I received from Tanlac There's no medicine like it

Keene Won and Lost Millions of Dollars

It is to be questioned whether his tying up with Jay Gould or the $400 000 he wagered that William Jennings Bryan would be elected in 1896 was James R Keene's greatest error of judgment To his then associate Gould Keene attributed his losses in Western Union and wheat in the late '70s

For all of his speculations over 50 years Keene, when he died in 1913, left but $2,000 000 and he scored more failures in his operations than successes After his experience with Jay Gould other reverses followed and Keene was a bankrupt in 1884 By 1892 he was on his feet again, through his manipulations for the whisky combination and American Sugar Refining company

Later in the same decade he won and lost and won again on Brooklyn Rapid Transit only to drop $2 000 000 in Third avenue railway speculations At the time of the flotation of United States steel he hit the ceiling only to fall to the floor shortly after with the collapse of Southern Pacific.—New York Times

Home of Pineapple

The pineapple is of American origin, growing wild in Brazil and Mexico It has been known since the Sixteenth century and was first cultivated solely for royalty in the gardens of their private grounds Brazil still possesses the best and most appreciated varieties although in other countries much work has been done to develop a better pineapple

It is claimed that the flavor and evenness of pulp of the Brazilian pineapples have not been equaled The season in Brazil comes in December and it has been a source of wonder to tourists arriving in Brazil during the pineapple season why some one has not undertaken to make shipments to the United States, where there should be a splendid market for them arriving in midwinter

Mary Lost Her Tip

A newly appointed judge of the Supreme court who felt pretty well satisfied with himself, was dining at a hotel and he said to the Irish waitress, "Mary how long have you been in this country?"

"Two years, sir"

"Do you like it?"

"Sure, it's well enough" she answered

"But, Mary," he continued, "you have many privileges in this country which you'd not have in Ireland Now at home you'd never be in a room with a justice of the Supreme court and chatting familiarly with him"

"But sure sir," said the girl, quite in earnest, "ye'd never be a judge at home"—Boston Transcript

Had Forgotten

A Hot Springs girl recently ran across a lot of love letters written many years ago, by her mother to her father before they were married The daughter pretended that the letters were of recent date and read them to her mother, who was disgusted beyond measure, saying it was surprising that such silly persons were permitted to live "I thank goodness," she said, that when I was a girl I had some sense."—Philadelphia Inquirer

Both Wrong

Two travelers were seated in a train going to Chicago As the train drew up at a station one of the travelers opened the window, and drawing a deep draught of fresh air turned to his companion and exclaimed

"Isn't this salubrious?"

"Yes," replied his friend, "I think it is exhilarating"

"Beg pardon" chimed in the conductor "ye're both wrong, it's Kalamazoo"

MOTHERS AND THEIR CHILDREN

When Children Dress Alike.

One Mother Says:

Now that it is considered fashionable to dress two children of the same family alike, I keep always on hand two rolls of initialed tape with which I mark every garment. This not only avoids disputes, as the girls are so nearly the same size, but gives them a feeling of responsibility for their own individual clothes, since there is no chance of wearing one another's things.

Sat on Egg—Ample

A boastful traveler was in the village inn, trying to "kid the hicks."

"Speaking of chickens," he said, "reminds me of an old hen my father used to have on his farm. She'd hatch anything from a tennis ball to a lemon. Why, one day she sat on a chunk of ice and hatched out a pint of hot water!"

"That don't come up to a hen my mother had," remarked one of his hearers. "They fed her on sawdust once, by mistake. Well, she laid ten eggs, and sat on 'em, and when they were hatched, nine of them had wooden legs, and t'other chicken was a woodpecker!"—American Boy.

Turkey Puts Marriages, on the Bargain Counter

In line with the policy introduced by Mustapha Kemal Pasha, municipal councils in Anatolia have decreed that the marriage ceremony shall be so cheapened that it will be within reach of the poorest peasant.

The husband is forbidden to give the bride more than two costumes or more than one set of furniture. Adornment of the bride with gold coins, decoration of carriages or giving of presents by relatives of the two parties are also forbidden.

Music is interdicted unless the drummer obtains a permit, which costs one Turkish pound. He in turn is not entitled to accept more than five Turkish pounds for playing two days and two nights. Only three vehicles may be sent to bring the bride, and the driver charging more than one pound will be imprisoned.

The measure, it is hoped, will aid the government in its professed policy of increasing the sadly depleted population of Turkey.

Aliens to Be Barred From Salmon Fishing

As the result of the recent agitation in which the American Legion played a prominent part and the fact that a similar law became effective in the state of Washington on the first of this month, a determined effort is to be made to enforce the Oregon statute which forbids aliens to fish for salmon in the Columbia river. Notices to that effect have been served on the packers by Carl D. Shoemaker, master fish warden.

The Oregon law has been in effect for several years, but its enforcement has been so slack that one official estimates fishing licenses were issued to more than two hundred aliens last year. The assertion is also made that some of these aliens have committed perjury in applying for licenses by making affidavits that they were citizens, while others have got by through inserting the words "first paper" before the word "citizen" in their affidavits.

MISS MACDONALD WINS SYMPATHY OF ENGLAND

Premier's 20-Year-Old Daughter, Quiet and Demure, Becomes Downing Street Mistress.

The London newspapers make much of the new mistress of 10 Downing street, Miss Isabel MacDonald, the twenty-year-old daughter of the new prime minister.

The fact that a quiet, unassuming and home-loving girl has suddenly been thrust into this position owing to the loss of her mother appeals universally to human sympathy, and interviews and portraits of the young woman are featured widely today.

The pictures show a robust girl with a pleasant, smiling face, but rather demure. Miss MacDonald told interviewers that her unusual name is the Gaelic form of the English Isabel, Gaelic being the native tongue in the north of Scotland, her father's home.

She is a student at a domestic science college in London and recently attended her lectures as usual before going to the Downing street mansion at the invitation of Mrs. Baldwin, who received her and showed her about the premises.

"I have been studying laundry work, housewifery and cooking," Miss MacDonald said, "but I am not fond of housekeeping. I much prefer science and physics."

She explained that although she is to be mistress at No. 10 she would not need to look after the housekeeping, because her father had a housekeeper. She has studied domestic economy to qualify herself for social welfare work. Her other interests include golf, hockey and music. She does not like dancing and is not a great reader.

Makes Aerial Survey of Ancient Chinese City

Following the example of investigators who recently added to their knowledge of Stonehenge by viewing the site from the air, Carl Bishop of the Smithsonian institution has made an aerial survey of the remains of an ancient city located near the present town of I-Chow, sixty miles south of Peking.

The place, according to Bishop, was a site of considerable importance, antedating authentic history, which later became known as Yen, capital of the kingdom of that name, and which was burned by Chin Shiwang in 222 B. C.

There are thirty mounds traceable, which Bishop designates as burial places, while others of greater dimensions he believes to be sites of temples and public buildings.

Best Floor Attraction In Years Is Scheduled; Billy Kummer "Kumming"

Favorite Coker Star of Former Central League Will Return to Old Haunts.

WITH BUTLER ATHLETICS

The basketball game for which fans have long been expressing a desire will be offered to them on Thursday night March 13 at the Connellsville High School gymnasium. It is expected that it will stir old memories in the hearts of the old timers and create a new spirit in the game for the younger athletes. Billy Kummer the one and only Bill, is coming here on that date and will bring with him his Butler Athletic basketball professional team.

The game has been arranged by the Unity Fraternity. In the old days of members of that club they got their first inkling of basketball by watching Billy Kummer perform in the cage on the West Side. His brilliancy is still fresh in their minds and more so in the memories of those who were the real rooters at that time.

Kummer himself has not forgotten the old town and he is looking forward according to correspondence to seeing many of his old friends at the game.

The Fraternity has involved itself in considerable expense to bring the club here but it is that the game will go across on its merits. No better attraction than Billy Kummer star forward of the old Central League can be thought of.

The game will be the banner event of the local season. For the past several years there has been talk of bringing Kummer back for a game but never, until this year has that talk materialized into anything sound.

Kummer is captain of the Butler team which has in its personnel some of the leading floor stars in Pennsylvania. He gives assurances that he and his full crew will be here.

Nelson Girls Lose Game By Close Margin

The Nelson Girls champions of this region failed to enter the ranks of claimants to the title in Western Pennsylvania last night when they played the Valley Girls of Pittsburg now title-holders. The Valley team retains its crown through a two point victory a sudden spurt in the last minutes of the fourth quarter throwing the visitors into the lead. The final was 22-20.

A big crowd saw the game and enjoyed it throughout. The clash was the first real test of the strength of the Nelson quintet from a titular standpoint and it rose to the occasion admirably.

The teams were tied at 8-8 when the first quarter closed and Valley was leading 15-11 at the half way mark. In the third period the local lassies held the visitors to a single point and garnered five themselves but the final quarter spelled disaster.

High School Meets Greensburg Hi on Saturday Evening

Basketball will be passe in Connellsville until Saturday night when the Connellsville High School meets Greensburg High in a game here. The Cokers are expected to show some improvde form by that time and will be greeted by a large crowd.

Greensburg has cut Connellsville off its football schedule because it feels the locals do not put up enough opposition. The Orange and Blue crew is going to show the Westmoreland county basketeers what a champion floor aggregation can do in the way of smearing up large scores however and every fan who has ever witnessed a Connellsville defeat at the hands of Greensburg on the gridiron will be out to enjoy the sweetness of revenge.

BIG CROWD WILL SEE OPENING OF SERIES BETWEEN CASEY-FRAT

One of the most important games looming up for next week is the basketball game on Tuesday night, at the High School gymnasium, between the Casey Club and the Unity Fraternity basketball teams. This game is the opener of a series of five and will be closely followed by supporters of both teams.

The Fraternity is believed to be just getting into its stride and the Caseys have already hit a wonderful pace demonstrating this by the defeat on last Tuesday of the Fiji Panthers of Pittsburg here.

There is considerable rivalry between the teams. It has existed for the past several seasons. In the City League last year the teams split, each winning one game and the series this year is regarded as simply a continuation of the games, designed to finally determine superiority.

The Casey team has recently strengthened but practically the same line-up that closed the season last year for the Frat will open the game next week.

RAILROADERS ARE VICTORS IN GAME AGAINST FACULTY

The Baltimore & Ohio railroad basketball team last night won its second game of the season defeating the High School Faculty, 24-16. The game followed the Nelson Valley Girls clash at the Armory.

The Faculty was unable to connect accurately when it did have shots and close guarding upset many possible points. McCormick was here, scorer for the railroad five getting four goals.

The line up

Fan Writes Opinion Concerning Possible Elimination Series

A person, who signs a letter "A Fan" and who is evidently much interested in basketball in the city, comes to the front with a matter that has been more or less freely discussed at various times here. He points out the evil of independent basketball in Connellsville and the thing that most of all tends to slacken interest in the sport here.

In the opinion of the writer an elimination series especially in so far as the Lion Tamers and Casey Club are concerned would be impossible, because both teams in a great measure use the same men.

The letter addressed to the sporting editor follows:

Although not personally acquainted with you I am taking the liberty to write you this letter as a matter to be governed by public opinion.

What is the difference between the Casey Club and the Lion Tamers? I have watched both teams play and the personnel is with some exceptions the same?

In the play off for the city championship how are above mentioned teams going to play each other or is it just a stall to get two chances at the city title? I, as a hearty and enthusiastic fan for good sports would suggest that before any elimination games are played that each team submit a list of players any number and that no one player is to be listed on more than one team.

Of course that is to the best of my knowledge the only reasonable way to stop all alibis after any team has been eliminated.

This method will be severely hard on several teams but it is better that way than to let some teams get several chances at the title.

Yours for Clean Sports.

TRIO OF FAMOUS BARKS QUIT SEA

Norwegian Craft Among Last of Sailing Vessels.

More than forty years ago when steam on the seas was just approaching a lusty maturity and sails yet dotted the far flung horizons of Neptune in every quarter of the globe three barks, destined by a grim fate to be among the last of their proud species, set sail from the famous shipyards of the Clyde for adventures in storms and calms on all the seven seas.

They were the Dova Lisboa, the Dova Rio and the Alexandria—three sister sailing ships that have carried the flag of Norway to the ports of the world weathered many wild seas and faithfully brought their cargoes to scores of ports without injury and but with little delay. All three are well known in the port of Mobile, and all three were laid up there from two to four years.

Among Prides of the Sea

These three barks were among the prides of the sea when they set forth on their countless voyages and no finer three barks have ever been built. Their design was of the best, they were constructed of Swedish iron, the finest material ever known for ship building, and worth, according to J B Oliver & Co., their Mobile agents, $750,000 apiece.

Swedish iron is practically rust proof and almost indestructible. It is no longer used, however, in the building of ships because of its tremendous cost, and although the modern steam vessels can boast of many superiorities and comforts that sailing ships never knew, not one in a thousand is built of this fine and rare metal that a half century ago marked the zenith of shipbuilding material.

Neither rust nor corrosion attacks Swedish iron and the hulls of vessels constructed of it are much prized among marine men and make some old sailing ships very valuable today, which would be almost worthless if built of any other material.

Manned by Hardy Seamen.

In addition to being constructed of Swedish iron, all three barks have been manned by the stern, stanch sailors of the land of Eric the Red, sailors of a breed who dared to sail oceans of uncharted waves long before the compass was ever invented and whose descendants today are among the hardiest of men of the sea.

But these barks like their sister sailing ships of every nationality, are now to retire from their sea, or perhaps have their wave-scarred old hulls filled with engines and wireless apparatus—and that is the point of this story.

Sails have reached their dotage, steam is in its full grown maturity and oil burners are in a lusty adolescence. Consequently the Alexandria, the Dova Rio and the Dova Lisbon have but a very short time in which to proudly fl at their sails as they plow the deep with their iron nosed bows.

The Dova Lisbon commanded by a doughty Norse skipper is now cutting the Atlantic on her last voyage as a sailing ship. She is bound for Grangemouth, Scotland and has been sold to German interests. The Lisboa was laid up at Mobile for nearly four years.

Days of Adventure End.

The Dova Rio commanded by another doughty Norseman Captain Larsen departed from Mobile last September after being laid up over two years. She went first to Pensacola and then to Fleetwood England also, it is said, on her final sailing voyage. She too has been sold and it is understood that she will be scrapped.

The Alexandria, which came to Mobile, Ala., over three years ago, is now in the southern drydocks prior to sailing on what is said to be her farewell voyage to sail and sea. She too, has been sold and will probably be scrapped.

Commanded by Capt H Anderson the Alexandria will take a cargo of lumber out of that port in two or three weeks for Birkenhead, England. She will be the last of that famous trio of old-time barks who will spread her sails to the wind outside Mobile bay, unless the interests who have purchased her decide to keep her in sailing service, which is unlikely in these days of the rapid passing of sails from the ocean.

But these three barks are only a few of many that have gone to the "graveyard" of sailing ships in these days of steam and wireless. It will be but a brief time until the others will go. And as rapidly as they pass, so passes romance and adventure from the seas.

Mask Guards Painter From Lead Poisoning

Lead poisoning has long been the bugbear of painters. While working with paint having a high lead content the inhalation of the paint odors has been known to produce dangerous attacks of the well known "painters colic" while contact of lead paint with the skin particularly where it is cut or abraded often results in irritating diseases.

To combat these conditions a special gas mask or respirator has been devised. This is not so cumbersome as the conventional type merely serving as a filter against the lead fumes and not covering the whole face. It straps around the back of the head covering the nose and mouth but not the eyes thus affording free vision.

Worn in combination with rubber gloves for protecting the hands the new respirator affords ample protection against the possibility of contracting disease no matter what may be the lead content of the paint used.—New York World.

Human Decoy Used to Lure Wolf in Russia

The Russian hunter's method of killing wolves is interesting. A great hefty peasant, with yellow hair snub nose red face and shining blue eyes brought an immense wolf's skin to me once and I asked him how he had obtained it. He was standing at the window of his izba one late afternoon he said, when he saw a wolf walking through the village street. He seized his gun, called a friend and they went in pursuit. The wolf stopped on the top of a hill outside the village and looked at them. To prevent it from running away the second man went down on all fours and moved toward the wolf. He looked in his heavy sheepskin shuba, for all the world like an animal and the wolf ran back to attack him. When it had come to a convenient distance the hunter shot it. —Francesca M Wilson in Manchester Guardian.

Strange, Strange!

This is veracious. A clergyman from Cambridge, Mass., had occasion to preach to the inmates of an insane hospital. During his sermon he noticed that one of the patients paid the closest attention, his eyes riveted upon the preacher's face his body bent eagerly forward. Such interest was most flattering. After the service the speaker noticed that the man spoke to the superintendent so as soon as possible the preacher inquired:

"Didn't that man speak to you about my sermon?"

"Yes."

"Would you mind telling me what he said?"

The superintendent tried to sidestep but the preacher insisted.

"Well" he said at last, 'what the man said was, 'Just think, he's out and I'm in.'"—The Christian Register (Boston).

Runs Submerged

An inexpensive undershot power wheel which will run even when wholly submerged and which is especially adapted for use in mountain streams was invented some time ago by a Salt Lake man. The wheel's source of power lies in the fact that the blades fold on the upward stroke, making the leverage greater at all times on those below than above the center shaft and thereby enabling it to run in water of any depth. The wheel which is made entirely of metal may be of any diameter and width.

To prevent clogging with floating weeds or debris the wheel is inclosed in a heavy mesh wire screen so connected to the wheel that it revolves in the opposite direction.

CORRELATION OF COAL BEDS IN THE BITUMINOUS FIELD

Particularly In Monongahela Formation In Penna., Ohio and W. Va.

HOW TO IDENTIFY THEM

The results of a study of the correlation of coal beds in the Monongahela formation of Ohio, Pennsylvania and West Virginia are given in Bulletin 9, Coal Mining Investigations, by Reinhardt Thiessen, research chemist, Department of the Interior, and J. N. Staud, research fellow, Carnegie Institute of Technology. Just published by the last-named institution. The study was conducted at the Pittsburg Experiment Station of the Bureau of Mines under a cooperative agreement with the Carnegie Institute of Technology and an advisory board of coal mine operators and engineers.

The Pittsburg, Sewickley and Redstone beds and coals of the Monongahela formation are described in the bulletin; the correlation characters in the coals are discussed; and the means whereby the coals may be identified are given.

The Pittsburg coal can be identified easily by means of its characteristic spores and plant structure, even should only a small piece of coal be at hand, provided that it is not taken from the bed immediately above the floor.

The Redstone and the Sewickley coals can also be identified by a similar means. While they are easily distinguishable from the Pittsburg coal, more care has to be exercised to distinguish them from one another.

Coals from regions where they have been highly metamorphosed or crushed through earth movements are not easily identified by this means, due to their opaqueness, alteration, and disappearance of characteristic constituents.

The geologist is not always readily able to correlate with the correct horizon of the geological system the coal outcrops or coal beds penetrated by drill-holes, or even the coal being worked in certain mines, state Messrs. Thiessen and Staud. This is particularly true in areas that have been subjected to extensive erosion, and are now cut by ravines and drainage systems. When faults occur in such areas the problem becomes still more complex.

In the deeper seated coal beds, where drilling is the only means of finding them, it also becomes difficult at times from the fact that in earlier days, coal beds all over the country were given local names without reference whatever to the same coal in other localities.

Partly on account of this confusion of names and misinformation, and partly for other reasons, there is a wide lack of knowledge among the various classes of men employed in the coal industry as to the identity of the coal bed in which they are working—the coal they are mining is often not at all what they designate it. Occasionally the misnaming of a coal bed is intentional. A coal from a certain bed and from a certain mine may naturally have been dirty, or through carelessness or otherwise in mining it may have contained much dirt, and bone, and thus come into disrepute. This same coal is later bought on the market under a name other than the correct one. Thus the coal buyer is at the mercy of the seller and the miner as to the kind of coal he is receiving, and he has as yet no method by which he can tell from which bed the coal is mined.

The man who buys or leases coal lands or coal beds has in certain cases no reliable data to correlate the bed he considers buying or leasing, and has no absolute check on the correct name of that bed. If a method could be devised by means of which, through certain characteristics of the coal or certain constituents in the coal, it could be identified, a great aid would be rendered to those concerned.

It has been known for some time that certain coal beds have certain constituents characteristic to that bed, and not found in any other bed. The spore-exines in particular have definite and clearly defined characteristics—such as form, size, and sculpturing—by means of which different kinds may be distinguished from one another. In the coals, the characteristics of these ancient spores have in many cases been so well preserved that one species can easily be distinguished from other species. In examining the spore-spines of a number of sections of a certain bed it was found that by far the larger number of the spore-spines of that bed are largely of the same kind. In other beds, two kinds; while in others, three kinds of spore-exines form the bulk of the spore matter. In comparing the predominating spores of one bed with those of another, it was found that those of one bed are different from those of any other. Although comparatively few beds have been examined in this respect, there was sufficient basis to believe that each coal bed, or at least many coal seams, contains one or more spores which are predominant and characteristic of that bed. Based on this principle, it appeared possible to identify a coal by means of such characteristics. It was therefore thought important enough to pursue a systematic investigation to either prove or disprove the feasibility of correlating coal beds by this scheme.

Millions of Tons Coal Saved by Water Power

America's tumbling rivers and waterfalls—the few of them used for hydro-electric purposes — supplied 35.1 per cent of all electricity generated in the United States in 1923, the United States Geological Survey reported here today.

Generation of this percentage of the nation's total public-utility power requirements by water saved the nation 23,500,000 tons of coal, nearly 1,300 carloads a day, besides relieving the railroads of the burden of transporting this huge amount of fuel.

The total production of electricity by public-utility plants in 1923 was 55,028,000,000 kilowatt hours. Of this amount, 19,015,701,000 kilowatt hours were water generated. The total production represented an increase of more than 17 per cent over the output for 1922. The percentage of water generated power, however, slipped down one per cent, from 36.1 to 35.1.

This decline in the percentage of water generated power represented another step backward from the high mark achieved in 1919, when 37.5 per cent of the 38,321,000,000 kilowatt hours generated in that year was water generated.

The production of electricity by the use of water power is dependent, however, upon the amount of water available for water power plants, and serious droughts have occurred in the past two years in different sections of the country which have materially affected the flow of streams in those sections. This reduction of water reduced the utilization of the full capacity of water power plants.

The 36,312,155,000 kilowatt hours of power obtained last year through the combustion of fuel was produced at the rate of 2.4 pounds of coal per kilowatt hour as compared with 2.5 pounds last year. This slight increase in fuel efficiency resulted in a saving of 1,800,000 tons of coal.

WOMAN AILING FOR A YEAR

Took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—Happy Results

Newcastle, Pa.—"I was all run-down and everybody thought I was going into a decline. I had been ailing for a year with pains in my right side so that I could hardly stand on my feet. When I walked I felt as if something was falling. I was not able to do any work and had a nurse most of the time. She spoke to me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I gave it a fair trial. Some women think one bottle should cure them, but I did not stop at that. I took more and got better, and am able ever since to do my own housework. There was a time, when I would complain of not feeling well, that my husband would say, 'Go to the doctor.' But now he will tell me to get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's, and it has always helped me. I have had druggists tell me that they had something better, but they don't tell me that now, for I take no other. I have been taking the Vegetable Compound now for five years. Any woman who cares to call or write, I will be glad to tell her how it helped me."—Mrs. MABEL LIST SHERMAHN, 515 Newell Ave., Newcastle, Pa. For sale by druggists everywhere.

The Paramount

"THE ACE OF THE LAW," the feature picture today at this theatre, presents Patricia Miller and "Ranger Bill" Miller in the leading roles.

Thrilling horsemanship, real and convincing love interest and an intelligent story place "The Web of the Law" far above the average Western picture and life it into the class of pictures that bring entertainment and enjoyment to all audiences.

What is of more than ordinary interest is the fact that the part is played by an ex-ranger so well known that he is called "Ranger Bill" Miller, even though he is no longer in the service. This is because of his long and courageous work while a ranger, during which time the man and his exploits were known throughout the state. Over and over again he fought and captured single-handed desperadoes whose daring had baffled the authorities for many a day, and thus "Ranger Bill" Miller acquired a degree of celebrity not enjoyed by any of his fellow riders.

His appearance in "The Web of the Law" is more important than if a screen idol had been cast for the part, for "Ranger Bill" plays himself far better than any professional actor could.

Friday and Saturday "Where Is This West," will be shown.

The Soisson

"BROKEN HEARTS OF BROADWAY," on view today, Friday and Saturday at this theatre presents Colleen Moore, Johnnie Walker and Alice Lake in the leading roles.

Here is a photodrama that goes to the very heart of artistic life in New York. And, while its theme is love, there are other strains of adventure running all through its thrilling scenes. It depicts Broadway, its people and its doings as no other play ever shown here has done. In fact, Cummings has made the "Street of streets" so realistic that one seems to feel he has picked up a large segment of the "Great White Way" and set it down squarely before your eyes.

The prologue to the real action of the drama is woven about the efforts of a newspaper man to win fame and fortune with a play that seems destined to become a vagrant manuscript, wandering here and there and back again through the labyrinth of stage producers. His mood of discouragement brings to life a romance of old and it is lived over again in "Broken Hearts of Broadway."

The action of this adventurous romance is woven about the struggles, heartbreaks and final triumphs of "Mary Ellis," a village choir singer, and "George Colton," a budding song writer. "Mary," played by Colleen Moore goes to the city of siren voices to seek success in a stage career. Among her earlier acquaintances are "Bubbles Revere," a philosophic gold-digger portrayed by Alice Lake, and "Colton," played by Johnnie Walker.

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week "The Eternal Three," will be shown.

The Orpheum

"THE ELEVENTH HOUR," melodrama of love and pirates with Charles Jones and Shirley Mason in the leading roles, opened today at this theatre for a three-day attraction.

One of the greatest sequences of the William Fox super-special, "The Eleventh Hour," was made in the Llewellyn Steel and Iron Works, Torrence, California. These moments of crisis show Shirley Mason climbing nimbly up a heavy iron chain suspended from a moveable crane. Below her yawn open vats of red, hissing, molten metal. The villian of the play, Alan Dale endeavors to lower the heroine into the liquid iron. Happily before this can be accomplished, Charles Jones comes to the rescue. Then ensues a terrific fight, and—well, of course, it isn't necessary exactly to outline the end of the scene and to tell what really happens.

While these scenes were made the big iron plant with its five thousand and more workers kept busily at its task of turning out tons and tons of fabricated steel. Pandemonium filled the air and neither whistle nor human voice could be heard at a dozen feet away. To give the actors their cues properly, Mr. Durning took Charles Jones's ever-ready frontier weapons, and with a revolver in either hand directed the various scenes, the number of shots telling the actors what to do.

CHAPTER XVII

Punctual to his appointment that afternoon, the man who had sought an interview with Francis was shown into the latter's study in Clarges street.

He wore an overcoat over his livery, and directly he entered the room Francis was struck by his intense pallor. He had been trying feverishly to assure himself that all that the man required was the usual sort of help, or assistance into a hospital. Yet there was something furtive in his visitor's manner, something which suggested the bearer of a guilty secret.

"Please tell me what you want as quickly as you can," Francis begged. "I am due to start down into the country in a few minutes."

"I won't keep you long, sir," the man replied. "The matter is rather a serious one."

"Are you ill?"

"Yes, sir!"

"You had better sit down."

The man relapsed gratefully into a chair.

"I'll leave out everything that doesn't count, sir," he said. "I'll be as brief as I can. I want you to go back to the night I waited upon you at dinner—the night Mr. Oliver Hilditch was found dead. You gave evidence. The jury brought in 'suicide.' It wasn't suicide at all, sir. Mr. Hilditch was murdered."

The sense of horror against which he had been struggling during the last few hours, crept once more through the whole being of the man who listened. He was face to face once more with that terrible issue. Had he perjured himself in vain? Was the whole structure of his dreams about to collapse, to fall about his ears?

"By whom?" he faltered.

"By Sir Timothy Brast, sir."

Francis, who had been standing with his hand upon the table, felt suddenly inclined to laugh. Facile though his brain was, the change of issues was too tremendous for him to readily assimilate it. He picked up a cigarette from an open box, with shaking fingers, lit it, and threw himself into an easy-chair. He was all the time quite unconscious of what he was doing.

"Sir Timothy Brast" he repeated.

"Yes, sir," the man reiterated. "I wish to tell you the whole story."

"I am listening," Francis assured him.

That evening before dinner, Sir Timothy Brast called to see Mr. Hilditch, and a very stormy interview took place. I do not know the rights of that, sir. I only know that there was a fierce quarrel. Mrs. Hilditch came in and Sir Timothy left the house. His last words to Mr. Hilditch were, 'You will hear from me again.' As you know, sir—I mean as you remember, if you followed the evidence—all the servants slept at the back of the house. I slept in the butler's room downstairs, next to the plate pantry. I was awake when you left, sitting in my easy-chair, reading. Ten minutes after you had left, there was a sound at the front door as though someone had knocked with their knuckles. I got up to open it, but Mr. Hilditch was before me. He admitted Sir Timothy. They went back into the library together. It struck me that Mr. Hilditch had had a great deal to drink, and there was a queer look on Sir Timothy's face that I didn't understand. I stepped into the little room which communicates with the library by folding doors. There was a chink already between the two. I got a knife from the pantry and widened it until I could see through. I heard very little of the conversation, but there was no quarrel. Mr. Hilditch took up the weapon which you know about, sat in a chair and held it to his heart. I heard him say something like this: 'This ought to appeal to you, Sir Timothy. You're a specialist in this sort of thing. One little touch, and there you are.' Mr. Hilditch said something about putting it away. My master turned to Sir Timothy and said something in a low tone. Suddenly Sir Timothy leaned over. He caught hold of Mr. Hilditch's hand which held the hilt of the dagger, and—and—well, he just drove it in, sir. Then he stood away. Mrs. Hilditch sprang up, and would have screamed, but Sir Timothy placed his hand over her mouth. In a moment I heard her say, 'What have you done?' Sir Timothy looked at Mr. Hilditch quite calmly. 'I have ridded the world of a verminous creature,' he said. My knees began to shake. My nerves were always bad. I crept back into my room, took off my clothes and got into bed. I had just put the light out when they called for me."

Francis was himself again. There was an immense relief, a joy in his heart. He had never for a single moment blamed Margaret, but he had never, for a single moment forgotten. It was a closed chapter, but the stain was on its pages. It was wonderful to tear it out and scatter the fragments.

"I remember you at the inquest," he said. "Your name is John Walter."

"Yes, sir."

"Your evidence was very different."

"Yes, sir."

"You kept all this to yourself."

"I did, sir. I thought it best."

"Tell me what has happened since?"

The man looked down at the table.

"I have always been a poor man, sir," he said. "I have had bad luck whenever I made a try to start anything. I thought there seemed a chance for me here. I went to Sir Timothy and I told him everything."

"Well?"

"Sir Timothy never turned a hair, sir. When I had finished he was very short with me, almost curt. 'You have behaved like a man of sense, Walter,' he said. 'How much?' I hesitated for some time. Then I could see he was getting impatient. I doubled what I had thought of first. 'A thousand pounds, sir,' I said. Sir Timothy he went to a safe in the wall and he counted out a thousand pounds in notes, there and then. He brought them over to me. 'Walter,' he said, 'there is your thousand pounds. For that sum I understand you promise to keep what you saw to yourself?' 'Yes, sir,' I agreed. 'Take it, then,' he said, 'but I want you to understand this: There have been many attempts, but no one yet has ever succeeded in blackmailing me. No one ever will. I give you this thousand pounds willingly. It is what you have asked for. Never let me see your face again. If you come to me starving, it will be useless. I shall not part with another penny.'"

The man's simple way of telling his story, his speech, seemed all to add to the dramatic nature of his disclosure. Francis found himself sitting like a child who listens to a fairy story.

"And then?" he asked simply.

"I went off with the money," Walter continued, "and I had cruel bad luck. I put it into a pub. I was robbed a little, I drank a little, my wife wasn't any good. I lost it all, sir. I found myself destitute. I went back to Sir Timothy."

"Well?"

The man shifted his feet nervously. He seemed to have come to the difficult part of his story.

"Sir Timothy was as hard as nails," he said slowly. "He saw me. The moment I had finished, he rang the bell. 'Hedges,' he said to the manservant who came in, 'this man has come here to try and blackmail me. Throw him out. If he gives any trouble, send for the police. If he shows himself here again, send for the police.'"

"What happened then?"

"Well, I nearly blurted out the whole story," the man confessed, "and then I remembered that wouldn't do

"Now, Just Why Have You Come to See Me?" Francis Asked.

me any good, so I went away. I got a job at the Ritz, but I was took ill a few days afterward. I went to see a doctor. From him I got my death-warrant, sir."

"Is it heart?"

"It's heart, sir," the man acknowledged. "The doctor told me I might snuff out at any moment. I can't live, anyway, for more than a year. I've got a little girl."

"Now just why have you come to see me?" Francis asked.

"For just this, sir," the man replied. "Here's my account of what happened," he went on, drawing some sheets of foolscap from his pocket. "It's written in my own hand and there are two witnesses to my signature—one a clergyman, sir, and the other a doctor, they thinking it was a will or something. I had it in my mind to send that to Scotland Yard, and then I remembered that I hadn't a penny to leave my little girl. I began to wonder—think as meanly of me as you like, sir—how I could still make some money out of this. I happened to know that you were none too friendly disposed toward Sir Timothy. This confession of mine, if it wouldn't mean hanging, would mean imprisonment for the rest of his life. You could make a better bargain with him than me, sir. Do you want to hold him in your power? If so, you can have this confession, all signed and everything, for two hundred pounds, and as I live, sir, that two hundred pounds is to pay for my funeral, and the balance for my little girl."

Francis took the papers and glanced them through.

"Supposing I buy this document from you," he said, "what is its actual value? You could write out another confession, get that signed, and sell it to another of Sir Timothy's enemies, or you could still go to Scotland Yard yourself."

"I shouldn't do that, sir, I assure you," the man declared nervously, "not on my solemn oath. I want simply to be quit of the whole matter and have a little money for the child."

Francis considered for a moment.

"There is only one way I can see," he said, "to make this document worth the money to me. If you will sign a confession that any statement you have made as to the death of Mr. Hilditch is entirely imaginary, that you did not see Sir Timothy in the house that night, that you went to bed at your usual time and slept until you were awakened, and that you only made this charge for the purpose of extorting money—if you will sign a confession to that effect and give it me with these papers, I will pay you the two hundred pounds and I will never use the confession unless you repeat the charge."

"I'll do it, sir," the man assented.

Francis drew up a document, which his visitor read through and signed. Then he wrote out an open check.

"My servant shall take you to the bank in a taxi," he said. "They would scarcely pay you this unless you were identified. We understand one another?"

"Perfectly, sir!"

Francis rang the bell, gave his servant the necessary orders, and dismissed the two men. Half an hour later, already changed into flannels, he was on his way into the country.

CHAPTER XVIII

Lady Cynthia and Sir Timothy strolled after dinner that night, where the four had gathered at the Sanctuary, to the bottom of the lawn and watched the punt which Francis was propelling turn from the stream into the river.

"Are those two really going to marry?" Lady Cynthia asked, moving her head lazily in the direction of the disappearing punt.

"I imagine so."

"And you? What are you going to do then?"

"I am planning a long cruise. I telegraphed to Southampton today. I am having my yacht provisioned and prepared. I think I shall go over to South America."

She was silent for a moment.

"Alone?" she asked presently.

"I am always alone," he answered.

"That is rather a matter of your own choice, is it not?"

"Perhaps so. I have always found it hard to make friends. Enemies seem to be more in my line."

"I have not found it difficult to become your friend," she reminded him.

"You are one of my few successes," he replied.

She leaned back with half-closed eyes. There was nothing new about their environment—the clusters of roses, the perfume of the lilies in the rock garden, the even sweeter fragrance of the trim border of mignonette. Away in the distance, the night was made momentarily ugly by the sound of a gramophone on a passing launch, yet this discordant note seemed only to bring the perfection of present things closer. Back across the velvety lawn, through the feathery strips of foliage, the lights of the Sanctuary, shaded and subdued, were dimly visible. The dining-table under the cedar-tree had already been cleared. Hedges, newly arrived from town to play the major domo, was putting the finishing touches to a little array of cool drinks. And beyond, dimly seen but always there, the wall. She turned to him suddenly.

"You build a wall around your life," she said, "like the wall which encircles your mystery house. Last night I thought that I could see a little way over the top. Tonight you are different."

"If I am different," he answered quietly, "it is because, for the first time for many years, I have found myself wondering whether the life I had planned for myself, the things which I had planned should make life for me, are the best. I have had doubts—perhaps I might say regrets."

"I should like to go to South America," Lady Cynthia declared softly.

He finished the cigarette which he was smoking and deliberately threw away the stump. Then he turned and looked at her. His face seemed harder than ever, clean-cut, the face of a man able to defy Fate, but she saw something in his eyes which she had never seen before.

"Dear child," he said, "if I could roll back the years, if from all my deeds of sin, as the world knows sin, I could cancel one, there is nothing in the world would make me happier than to ask you to come with me as my cherished companion to just whatever part of the world you cared for. But I have been playing pitch and toss with fortune all my life, since the great trouble came which changed me so much. Even at this moment, the coin is in the air which may decide my fate."

"You mean?" she ventured.

"I mean," he continued, "that after the event of which we spoke last night, nothing in life has been more than an incident, and I have striven to find distraction by means which none of you—not even you, Lady Cynthia, with all your breadth of outlook and all your craving after new things—would justify."

"Nothing that you may have done troubles me in the least," she assured him. "I do wish that you could put it all out of your mind and let me help you to make a fresh start."

"I may put the thing itself out of my mind," he answered sadly, "but the consequences remain."

"There is a consequence which threatens?" she asked.

He was silent for a moment. When he spoke again, he had recovered all his courage.

"There is the coin in the air of which I spoke," he replied. "Let us forget it for a moment. Of the minor things I will make you my judge. Ledsam and Margaret are coming to my party tomorrow night. You, too, shall be my guest. Such secrets as lie on the other side of that wall shall be yours. After that, if I survive your judgment of them, and if the coin which I have thrown into the air comes down to the tune I call—after that—I will remind you of something which happened last night—of something which, if I live for many years, I shall never forget."

She leaned towards him. Her eyes were heavy with longing. Her arms, sweet and white in the dusky twilight, stole hesitatingly out.

"Last night was so long ago. Won't you take—a later memory?"

Once again she lay in his arms, still and content.

As they crossed the lawn, an hour or so later, they were confronted by Hedges—who hastened, in fact, to meet them.

"You are being asked for on the telephone, sir," he announced. "It is a trunk call. I have switched it through to the study."

"Any name?" Sir Timothy asked indifferently.

"Last Night Was So Long Ago. Won't You Take a Later Memory?"

The man hesitated. His eyes sought his master's respectfully but charged with meaning.

"The person refuses to give his name, sir, but I fancied that I recognized his voice. I think it would be as well for you to speak, sir."

WASHINGTON KNEW

By JOHN T. ADAMS,

Chairman of the Republican National Committee

George Washington was the first delegate to the Convention of 1787 which wrote the American Constitution. He was at that time the most popular man in this country, and the news of his desire to serve as a delegate in such a convention persuaded leaders in many other states to follow his example. It may be said his leadership in a large measure made the convention possible.

He was elected President of the convention. Throughout its deliberations he wielded tremendous influence, not only with the delegates composing that body, but with the people of the country, who were watching with interest and considerable misgivings the deliberations.

To Washington, Madison, Samuel Adams, Hamilton, Randolph, Franklin and a few other leaders is due the fact that this attempt of the colonies to form a stable government did not fail.

Washington's work in the Constitutional Convention is thought by many to be the most important of his life, although it is overshadowed in the public mind by his heroic achievements as commander-in-chief of the Revolutionary army which won independence for the American colonies, and his record as the first President of the United States.

Those today who criticise the Constitution are raising no objections that were not heard in Washington's time. Human nature is practically the same in all generations. Every power vested in the judiciary, the executive or either branch of the Congress by the Constitution met with strenuous objections at the hands of some faction in the Constitutional Convention. Some thought it went too far, while others thought it did not go far enough. There were class and sectional divisions in that convention.

The document which is our charter of government as finally adopted has been described as "the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man." It has withstood the test of time and every crisis, even that of civil war. Under it this government has functioned 135 years. Our form of government today is acknowledged to be the best of any in the world.

No more conclusive proof of the wisdom of Washington and his associates is possible. Their example of submerging personal, class and sectional differences and interests to serve the common good and public welfare is one of the most inspiring in American history.

Retarding Effect of Storm On Production Less Serious Than Indicated at the Time

Largely Counteracted by Unaffected Plants Making Better Time.

LOSS WAS ONLY 9,100 TONS

Caused First Recession in Steady Upward Course Since First of Year; Weekly and Cumulative Totals Still Considerably Below Those of 1924.

From The Weekly Courier

The effect of the sleet storm of remarkable severity last week upon the production of coke was much less than at the time conditions appeared to indicate. The actual decrease from the preceding week was but 9,100 tons as contrasted with early estimates of several times that amount.

It is more precise to say, perhaps, that the loss incident to the storm was in very considerable part counteracted by plants which were not crippled in their power supply making better running time than they had been doing for several weeks. The operations dependent upon the West Penn Power system for their power for oven charging and drawing or coal cutting and mine haulage, etc., were completely down and out for one day at least, most of them for two days. Plants producing their own power fared very much better in that they were able to continue operations without a break although under some handicaps in drawing and charging ovens.

All plants suffered more or less from interruption to regularity in car placings, a number being obliged to stock coke. Shipments were correspondingly curtailed.

The H. C. Frick Coke Company's running schedule was disarranged more than any other of the large operators. For sometime past the schedule of this company has been five days at the majority of the plants and six days at the remainder. Last week only two plants out of 36 active made six days, 23, five days, six, four days and four three days. One plant of W. J. Rainey Inc., lost two days. The other five made full time. Among the merchant producers approximately 40 per cent of the plants lost one day. A few made four days and a less number only three days.

The past week was the first of the year to date in which a gain has not been registered. The regional total of 212,790 tons was however, one of the four largest of the year and was 45,990 tons greater than at the beginning of January. Compared with the corresponding week in 1923 last week's output is 48,280 tons behind. The cumulative total for 1924 to February 23 stands at 1,665,280 tons which is 290,620 tons, or 11.3 per cent short of the mark attained to February 17, 1923.

The restrictions placed upon coke making by the weather conditions of last week served to draw attention to the close balance that has been established between production and consumptive demands. Several furnaces which have not been receiving their full quotas recently made effort to supply the shortage with spot coke. A search of the region brought to light the more or less disconcerting fact that coke of this classification was a minus quantity. It was not available even at prices considerably in excess of those recently ruling.

The present week will see a complete recovery from the effects of the sleet storm. Production will be enlarged but it is not anticipated that there will be a big upward leap, the merchant producers still being very much inclined to pursue a conservative policy. Meantime they will lay stress on the fact already known to the trade that the present range of prices offers no inducement to take risks or to put forth unusual effort to get business.

The estimated production of coke during the week ended Saturday February 23, was 212,790 tons divided between the two districts as follows: Connellsville 121,350, a loss of 9,570 tons, Lower Connellsville 91,440, a gain of 470 tons or a net loss of 9,100 tons, as compared with a total gain of 1,800 tons during the week preceding.

By interests the production was: Furnace, 126,900, a decrease of 8,700 tons; merchant 85,890, a decrease of 400 tons, as compared with increases of 600 and 1,200 tons respectively during the week ended February 16.

The additions of 255 to the number of active ovens resulted from the firing up of 236 ovens at Denbo, a furnace plant, and of 16 at Tower Hill No. 2 and 13 at Washington No. 1, a gross gain of 281. Yukon with 27 ovens, was blown out and two ovens are off at Washington No. 2 making the net increase of both interests and both districts [illegible].

Production by the merchant and furnace interests and the total compared with the corresponding week in 1923 is shown herewith.

GENERAL BUYING OF STEEL PRODUCTS IS RUNNING LIGHT

Volume Is Fair But Market Is Less Active than Formerly; Variety Of Explanations Offered.

Special to The Weekly Courier

NEW YORK, Feb 27.—The American Metal Market and Daily Iron & Steel Review will review the steel and iron trade tomorrow as follows:

General buying of finished steel products by jobbers and ordinary manufacturing consumers has been running distinctly lighter in the past fortnight than in January. There is still a fair volume of business being placed, but the market is distinctly less active than formerly.

By precedent, if there is any change in the volume of activity at this time of year, it should be in the other direction as spring is approaching. The great improvement that occurred in the steel market at about the turn of the year was not according to precedent although a similar thing occurred a year earlier being recognized then as unusual.

The present trend may be due simply to the market having set somewhat too strong a pace at the turn of the year. Various other explanations are mentioned in the trade, which always displays facility in assigning causes including the Teapot Dome scandal, declines in Wall Street, political uncertainty and the wintry weather.

The steel mills are much less sold up than they usually are when they are as active as at present. Last April when steel buying turned less active, the industry had much momentum. Now it has little except that rails and tin plates are very well sold up to July 1st. Continued dullness would soon have an effect upon mill operations.

While general buying has been rather light there is better freight car buying since both the New York Central and the Pennsylvania are covering large requirements. The January report of fabricated steel bookings showing 72 per cent against 80 per cent for December has been commented on unfavorably, but by far the better comparison is that in the three months ending with January bookings averaged 69 per cent against 61 per cent in the same three months a year earlier.

Finished steel prices are unchanged, but in plates and sheets there is a little additional weakness.

Production of steel ingots has been practically stationary in the past two or three weeks with a rate of about 45,000,000 tons annually.

The pig iron markets are very sluggish, consumers being very conservative.

Demurrage at By-Product Coke Ovens Is Proposed

March 6 has been set as the date and St. Louis named as the place for a hearing on a complaint filed in behalf of the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company which involves the question of demurrage on cars supplied by-product coke ovens.

The suspended schedules propose to eliminate by-product coke ovens which are not adjacent to or operated in conjunction with coal or coke are not subject to the demurrage rules.

The coke ovens in question are located on the Missouri Pacific within the switching limits of St. Louis. The outcome of this proceeding will be watched with considerable interest by operators of coke ovens as it may establish a precedent in connection with the demurrage rules applicable to this class of coke producers.
